Compulsory REVISION comments
Minor REVISION comments	This study evaluated the influence of perceived organisational support on job stress among selected public and private sector employees. The study is properly designed, executed, and data were analysed properly. The results support the conclusions made by the authors. My only concern is that the perceived organizational support accounts for only 6% of the variance of measured job stress. No doubt, there are many factors that contribute to job stress, which are far more complicated and interact with one another. Thus, further studies are needed to reveal more contributing factors to workplace stress.
