I reviewed the article and I found it in good standing. Two questions and recommendations:

1- Authors started their introduction with the experience. This is good but following 2-3 pages hardly have any citations. Perhaps, they include few citations to back some of the paragraphs on the first few pages of their introduction.

2 - Authors showed the standard deviation or error bar on their time scale monitoring for noise. What is n equal at each point? When they take the average, average of no what?

Once these concerns are addressed, this article is in publishable condition.
