Title of the Manuscript:	Responses of Rhopalosiphumpadi (L.)(Homoptera: Aphididae) on different wheat cultivars under laboratory conditions
Type of Article:	Original Research Article

PART 2:

FINAL EVALUATOR'S comments on revised paper (if any)	Authors' response to final evaluator's comments
In response to the author's response concerning L13: Blackman and Eastop are indeed English speakers, but the website from which you have copied the text involves a series of short-hand scientific notes as opposed to complete sentences. You have re-written their short-hand sentence and have changed the comma to an 'and', thereby changing the intended meaning of the sentence. Even if you had retained their exact sentence and not changed their use of the comma for the word 'and', it is still not a complete sentence for use in formal writing. If you wish to keep 'occurring' in this continuous form of the verb, you will need to re-write as: "Distribution of the bird cherry-oat aphid, Rhopalosiphumpadi(L.) is virtually cosmopolitan, with anholocyclic populations occurring in warm climates or where primary hosts are unavailable". Or use the verb in its present form as: "Distribution of the bird cherry-oat aphid, Rhopalosiphumpadi(L.) is virtually cosmopolitan and anholocyclic populations occur in warm climates or where primary hosts are unavailable". Minor points: L44 – susceptibility L83 – misspelling of means The discussion needs a re-write with correct English and English grammar	L13: We accept the suggestion and appreciate the reviewer's explanation. We have corrected the sentence. L44: We accept the suggestion. L83: We have corrected the word "Means". The discussion has been rewritten.
