PART 2:

FINAL EVALUATOR'S comments on revised paper (if any)	Authors' response to final evaluator's comments
Again, the present paper is same as the previously published paper (Jadoon et al., 2012). The present paper cannot be regarded as the original paper. Table 1 and Table 3 are the same as those of Tables 1 and 2 in Jadoon et al. (2012). Also, there are many same descriptions in the text. One experiment cannot be divided into two parts. The author(s) should have published the results in one paper. Each of the papers should have its own originality and should be independent. Every scientists have always take care of this point. This is a common ethical attitude as the scientists when they publish papers. If the present paper was accepted, the editorial board of the journal as well as the authors would be criticized from the scientist's world. Therefore, the reviewer cannot change his decision.
