PART 1:

Journal Name:	Asian Journal of Agricultural Extension, Economics & Sociology
Manuscript Number:	Ms_AJAEES_24403
Title of the Manuscript:	The Impact of Antidumping Measure on Indian Imports of Chinese Raw Silk
Type of Article:	Original Research Article

PART 2:

FINAL EVALUATOR'S comments on revised paper (if any)	Authors' response to final evaluator's comments
According to the "article title" and its abstract, the first two lines in particular, this paper undoubtedly is responsible and necessary to analyse the "impact" of antidumping measures issued by India on Chinese raw silk, rather than to prove that the reduction of dumping exists actually or the 'effect' (see p.3) of such antidumping policies applied by India. In other words, the critical core point of this article should be the analysis of impact as the author claimed from the very beginning instead of the pure narrative regarding the background, the cause and effect per se, as well as the other unnecessary details. Further, based on the section of methodology, what the research question exactly is is not clear. I, therefore, have to disappointedly point out that the revised edition does not offer solid academic contribution in the issue area about the WTO or political economy, and does not make it at least better than its original manuscript. Last, antidumping defined and judged in the Agreement on Implementation of Article VI of the GATT 1994 is very accurate according to international trade law; however, such legal concept has not been persuasively proved through the quantitative approach used by the author.
