PART 2:

FINAL EVALUATOR'S comments on revised paper (if any)	Authors' response to final evaluator's comments
The author has made some improvements as against the first submission. But there are still some corrections to be made. Firstly, a research is not conducted in a vacuum. Your work is either adding to knowledge or inventing new knowledge. Even in the case of inventing new knowledge, you must still show how that new knowledge links up with what have been discovered before. As such, in the discussion of any research, the researcher then shows this evidence(s). This is the essence of using literature support. This is why I still suggest the author should use credible literatures (especially very recent ones, except if there are not) to discuss his/her findings. Secondly, as I suggested the first time, there is still evidence that the author did not seek for language assistance, preferably from a language editor. Although I tried to assist with some (as you will find in the article text), but I still think the article needs English language assistance, because the ultimate goal is to make this article available to the entire world, and both the journal and reviewers are surely going to be included in readers' assessment.
