

Editor's Comment:

After reviewing the revised manuscript, all critiques, reports, and feedbacks pertinent to manuscript above submitted to AJMH, below is my editorial note with the final decision on the manuscript:

Response to Reviewers' Notes:

- Not fully met with.
- Even if there was a partial response to some of the notes, the same mistake types, whether grammatical, typing, formatting or scientific are being repeated all over the text.
- Further, there are so many other fundamental mistakes and deficiencies the reviewers themselves probably are not aware of.

Editor's Notes on the Revised Manuscript:

See my edited pdf form attached. Notes are mentioned in side balloon boxes.

Editorial Comment:

- The topic is fine and might have some benefit for veterinarian and human health within the local community. However, the absence of scientific research experience and research writing skill is overwhelming the manuscript.
- The paper needs to be rewritten by the assistance and guidance of a scientific research and English language writing agency.
- The notes and critiques I have brought have to be followed.
- Many sections are deficient scientifically, knowledge completion-wise, and analytically.
- The article is full of English language grammatical and punctuation mistakes, allover.

Final Decision:

I would NOT recommend publishing this manuscript the way it is. All notes and critiques highlighted first have to be managed. I would be happy to look up a revised from once received.
