Opposite to what the author stated, revision was not done or at least it was not done throughout.

To illustrate this statement, see, for example:

- page 2, two ways of referencing: Wu (2005) found that the cosmetology students had exhibited positive acknowledgement and trend in "Learning motive", "Learning behavior", and "Learning outcome" of their professional courses. Learning motive can offer a prediction of the learning outcomes. Difference in gender, age, family education and attitude, values and social experiences will contribute to significant differences in aspect of "Learning motive" [1].

- page 3; two ways of referencing, use of "and" and "&", reference number stacked to text: Boshier and Riddel believe that learning motivations can be classified as social contact, social stimuli, career development, social services, external expectations and cognitive interests[6]. Binner & Dean & Millinger (1994) believe that

- page 3, words stacked: Course, Use of

Page 7: two spaces between words: Attitude in...

These are just examples; the text needs to be corrected throughout and the references (along the text and in the final list) must follow the guidelines for authors.

Thus, a revision should be done (and the changes done should be highlighted for checking) before publication.
