| Compulsory REVISION comments | This article has interesting chemical analysis for green and roasted coffee, including phenolic compounds. However, the article starts as ends: with an exhaustive reading and sometimes a mix of information. As the title, the whole text is long winded, with too many words for saying the same thing. In addition, there are mistakes of grammar, as Arabica and arabida (not standardized), 1 mL and 1mL, excessive use of some terms, as in lines 81 - 105 ("In this method..."), brands and company origin in the description of equipments are not mentioned, table is not respecting the standard of this journal, etc. I suggest the editor requests a professional review of the technical language, making the manuscript much clearer, concise, organized. The authors have careful review details of written, as capital letters / lowercase, spaces, standardization, and accordance with the general rules of technical and scientific writing. | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>The article has been thoroughly revised taking care of grammar and the standardization as mentioned. Repetition of words has been revised.</li> <li>The company of equipment used has been mentioned.</li> <li>Tables have been aligned as per the author guidelines.</li> <li>The paper has been carefully reviewed making all the necessary amendments.</li> </ul> |
