Compulsory REVISION comments
Minor REVISION comments	Generally a good write up but there are few grammatical errors and the author should address them. Why did you not attempt the use of immunosuppression? Is it possible that the identified JKa antibodies may be an incidental finding and not the culprit. See manuscript for other comments	Corrections with regards to grammatical errors have been effected Immunosuppression was put into consideration as prednisolone was prescribed. The presence of anti-JKa alloantibody was an incidental finding and it induces auto-immune haemolytic anaemia by altering the epitope configuration of the patient's red cell antigen. The extended phenotyping in another facility in the United Kingdom where the anti-JKa was detected. Thank you.
