The explanation is due to the arduous fieldwork for data collection. The authors are commended for the basic research that allows us to diagnose the in situ conservation status of the population of H. speciosa along the Mangabeira Trail at the Caju Reservation located in Sergipe, Brazil.	The H. speciosa is a Brazilian native tree and its main product exploited is a fruit that has a great social and economy importance, specially for northeast region in Brazil. Understanding behavior H. speciosa population can provide important knowledge for sustainable management in order to conserve this species that is suffering with irrational exploration by its cover reduction and fragmentation.
