Compulsory REVISION comments	The author submitted the Ms " Phytomass and components of sesame production cultivated under salinity of the soil and nitrogen fertilization " for possible publication at the Journal. The authors aim was "To evaluate phytomass and production of sesame plants submitted the salinity of the soil" They found that salinity of the soil affected the sesame production negatively and the recommended nitrogen fertilization is 70% for the best reduction of the saline stress. High doses of nitrogen provoke reduction of the sesame production and potentiate the harmful effects of the salinity in the soil. Therefore, the paper is good for publication at the Journal. It is well written and appropriate discussed, with enough references, clear results.
