| Compulsory REVISION comments | The description of this case is very superficial. What was the exact visual acuity in both eyes? Hand movement or no light perception? Was the "corneal opacity" diffuse, or central? What about the eyelids and conjunctival fornices? A photograph is also required. What is the concentration of alcohol in this perfume? It is hard to see that a common perfume can cause full thickness, diffuse corneal scar. Was it a large amount of the perfume or just one puff? What was the result of follow-up? Was keratoplasty performed in the long-term period? | The visual acuity was light perception bilaterally. The corneal opacity was diffuse bilaterally. The eyelids and conjunctival fornices were normal. Photograph is attached. The concentration of alcohol is not indicated on the bottle. The quantity that got into the eyes cannot be ascertained. It is likely to be a large quantity since the bottle has no conventional spray nozzle. The child was lost to follow-up after the second visit. Keratoplasty could not be performed. |
